Newly inaugurated Clinton wants change

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - William Jefferson Clinton was inaugurated the 42nd president of the United States on Wednesday at the Capitol, ushering in a new generation of leadership and pledging to "face hard truths and take strong steps.

Clinton called for national renewal but acknowledged, "It will not be easy; it will require sacrifice.'

Clinton used the word "change" 11 times, and promised his administration would end the "deadlock and drift" of government.

With BYU doing its best to streamline programs and facilitate the evasive four-year degree, students taking extra religion classes may be fouling up the system.

The most recent statistics compiled by the university show that a full 40 percent of graduates have taken more than the required hours of religion

Springville prohibits snow dumping

Moving large amounts of snow from sidewalks and driveways into the road became a criminal act in Springville Tuesday night The Springville City Council passed city ordinance 2-93 making the piling of snow from driveways and sidewalks into the road a misdemeanor. It is punishable by a $1,000 fine or six months in jail or both

"We had a city ordinance prohibiting the placing of anything on the street that obstructs the road," said Harold Mitchell, city attorney for the city of Springville. "The police department didn't feel it was specific enough for them to enforce when snow was in the road.'

"People were pushing snow off parking lots onto the sidewalk or leaving it in piles in the street," Mitchell said.

"One business in town used a front-end loader to clear their parking lot and dumped the snow on the lot of the business next door," said Chris Sorenson, Springville city councilman.

"The city is not going to be strict," Mitchell said. "It (the law) is intended for enforcement only in extreme cases."

Educational funding requested while liquor and abortion debated

By GLENN CHRISTENSEN Universe Staff Writer

Gov. Mike Leavitt had education on his mind when he gave his budget address to a joint session of the Utah State Legislature Wednesday, calling upon lawmakers to approve his appropriations for elementary and higher education.

It was the second time since Monday's opening session that the governor has addressed the 104-member body.

In both cases, "The main thrust of his remarks were aimed at public education and higher education," said Vicki Varela, Leavitt's press secretary.

Leavitt called for $2.6 million to be dedicated to his centennial school program.

The program would allocate the money to 120 chosen schools throughout the state who would then have more flexibility in finances and curriculum choices, Varela said.

The governor also asked for $2 million more to be given to elementary schools to be used at their discretion for class size reduction.

In one final plea, Leavitt asked for $1.5 million to be given to higher education in an effort to keep up

Y student lawsuit bucks local racism

Utah is a pretty, great state ... that is if you're white. It has made great strides several years ago by being one of the last states to celebrate Martin Luther King Jr./Human Rights Day. The state has a long way still to go in achieving registered accounts in the formula of the state of t achieving racial equality and assuring civil rights of minorities.

Of particular interest to the Provo-Orem area is a case of alleged racial discrimination against Gordon J. Liu, a third year BYU law student from China.

Gordon J. Liu said he was denied service at a car dealership in Orem because he is Oriental.

Liu said that in September of 1992, he was denied customer service at Orem's University Motors because he is an Oriental. Liu said the dealership's owner, Matthew Miner, told him, "I don't like Oriental people and I don't want to do business with Oriental people." The dealership denies the charges, saying it was a question of "miscommunication."

Liu and the Utah Attorney General's Office has filed a complaint in the 4th District Court of Utah County. Liu is suing for violation of civil rights and is being advised by a BYU law professor. The case will either be decided in the legal system or settled out of court. If Liu's allegations are proven true, many questions will undoubtedly arise concerning racial tolerance in this predominantly Latter-day Saint community.

Any type of bigotry, resentment and discrimination based on religion, ethnicity, race or physical disability is contradictory to the teachings of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The Daily Universe condemns acts, big or small, that violate the inalienable rights of individuals. We applaud Liu and his willingness to seek justice legally from an alleged wrongdoing. We should all do our part in order to combat deliberate or inadvertent discrimination.

Martin Luther King Jr.'s "dream" was that of a United States animated by love and tolerance, led by the eternal human spirit of brotherhood. We believe despite some gain toward that dream, its realization is impeded by each act of

Varsity Theater accepts violence, not sex in films

Has the Varsity Theater deemed violence more acceptable than sex in the movies they edit? It would seem so because recently the movie "Under Siege," originally rated R, was shown and edited, but the only editing evident was that of profanity and vain use of deity. The edited version of the movie was still dis-

Among the violent acts shown were a knife being thrust into a skull, numerous death grips and homemade bombs blowing up unsuspecting members of the U.S.S. Missouri. The list does not include the many rounds of machine gun fire that were unleashed throughout the film. It was found that there is an act of violence every three minutes in cartoons, but "Under Siege" seemed to have one act of violence every thirty seconds.

If the Varsity Theater is becoming more lenient toward violence although they purport to be averse to objectionable material, it should make a note on film posters that the edited version still contains considerable violence. The Daily Universe believes this way the viewer will be able to decide more fully whether or not they wish to see it.

BYU should stop trying to recruit African-American students.

Because I feel if the administration isn't going to be fully committed to supporting black students, it should not try to recruit them.

I'm sure most of you have heard of some of the problems black students have encountered while here in "Happy Valley." But what you might not know is that BYU has already lost six of the black students who came here within the last year and a half; four were my friends.

What hurts me the most is that these students came to this university happy, competitive and socially outgoing. They arrived here and just died.

They died because they didn't have any kind of support system. I'm not saying they needed handouts — they needed support.

For example, handicapped students have ramps to help make buildings more accessible. That's support. Black students here don't have any such support system,

When a black student has a problem, who is he or she supposed to turn to? I don't mean problems like a broken fingernail. I mean when they get harassed by campus police, followed in the BYU Bookstore or talked down to by one of their professors. They can't just run and tell President Lee every time they have a problem. When you have a problem, you usually want to turn to someone home who understands you, who has been where you have been. Minorities don't have that option at BYU.

BYU also lacks academic support for some minority students. BYU is very competitive, regardless of whether you're are black or white.

I'm not asking professors to make courses any easier for minority students. But I do believe black students are given a false sense of comfort. Most black students aren't aware of the academic demands BYU puts on an individual. They are here because they are black, not because they can compete. Black students aren't inferior to white students, just not as prepared. By the time they adapt to their new surroundings, it's usually too late.

You put the academic problems on top of the social obstacles of attending BŶU and, unless you are a very strong soul, you die.

Fortunately, there is a beacon on the hill — The Communications Department.

The Communications Department has set up a diversity task force that is committed to a diverse student body and staff. I'm not saying this to be self serving, it's the truth.

Diversity is more than a strategic objective of the department, it is a mission. A mission that many take extremely seriously. It's not just lip service.

But the program doesn't have the support of the whole campus. That's the tragedy of the situation. Some of the departments are concerned with minorities but for the wrong reason accreditation. Filling a classroom chair with that 'token minority' so they can elevate accreditation pressure. This is definitely the wrong reason.

For almost 20 years, BYU neglected the whole diversity issue. A quick fix isn't going to do it. It's going to take a long term commitment that includes a diverse faculty, staff, student body and a Multi-cultural office students can rely on. If this commitment can't be made, BYU should leave minorities at

This article is to those who have the best of intentions, and whose hearts are in the right place, but who I believe are doing themselves a great disservice. They just don't understand homosexuality.

Why am I addressing this subject? Because I am homosexual, of course. This does not mean that I participate in "the gay lifestyle." It merely means for as long can remember I have not been physically attracted to women, just to men. I have not had a physical relationship with a man since I came into the Church, and I never plan on doing so again. But that does not mean I am now, or ever will be,

I realize with God nothing is impossible, and I will continue to pray and hope for things to come, but in the meanwhile, I try to live a happy, normal existence like the rest of you. And yes, I am happy. Every day I get stronger and my commitment to the gospel increases. I have only been active in the Church for about a year and a half, but the changes in my life have been amazing. I am worthy to attend BYU, I have Church callings, and soon I will go to the temple. Someday I hope to marry a strong LDS girl who is not afraid of the challenges we must face together, and I firmly believe at some point, I will find an examples for me. They give me faith to know I can make it through, even though some days it is so hard I feel like I am going to fall apart.

Enough about me. I'm writing to seek an end to our culturally supported prejudice against homosexuals. I will try to explain why I feel it is wrong.

First, homosexual people have a right to basic happiness. For them, this includes being able to be open and honest about their lives. They are tired of living double lives. As far as I know, it is impossible to be "converted" to homosexuality, so the argument that openness will make people

"choose" the lifestyle seems absurd to me.
Second, many homosexual men and women are unstable because they grow up with amazing amounts of guilt and anxiety. I won't even ask you to imagine what it is like to grow up hating yourself so much that you begin to question the worth of living. You are convinced that everyone else will hate you too if they find out what you really are.

I saw a great change in the gay community over the last few years before I left it. As society has become more accepting, gay people have become more stable. Of course there are many flaky gay people out there, but the younger generation is growing up

As people become happier and more productive, and as they grow up and resolve the inner turmoil of adolescence, they are better equipped to deal with truth i lives. A happy, productive, accepted sexual is far more likely to recognizthan one who is closeted and trap snares of hypocrisy and self-hatred.

I firmly believe that understand homosexuals will better pave the v the gospel to touch their lives. A finally get over hang-ups about their ality, and stop being consumed by i are far more likely to let the light of work in their lives.

It happened to me. A wonderful LDS woman loved me enough to example for me. I always felt that h was real, despite the intolerance I fe many Mormons. Through her example for the many Mormons. became convinced that there was happiness to achieve in life than I w ting. And because of that, I am Church today

Somehow I hoped BYU would be p ed with people like her. Many peop are like her, but others' minds are

I think a temple marriage is far me filling than a secular marriage, an LDS people would agree with me. 1 don't condemn secular marriage because they aren't the "best" around, do we? No, we let people the best happiness they can find them choose the best of what the ready for. Why can't we treat gay the same way? Until they find the gentless they have no reason to change believe they have no reason to change

The real tragedy is that I can't siname to this letter because of the ment I would receive from my fello dents at BYU. I pray for the day w realize we are all in this world to and we need to help each other.

Taxpayers' rights

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, recently spoke at BYU, praising a new bill passed by Congress which deals with National Endowment of the Arts funding. However, recent reports show the weakness and inadequacy of this bill because the NEA is still funding some obscene filthy art pro-

The question of art censorship has been raised in the discussions about the NEA, however, this is a dishonest red herring because at no time are measures suggested that would prevent these so called "artists" from creating what they want to create. The problem to be resolved is simple. Who is going to pay for it? In actual fact, the rights that are being violated are those of the taxpayer. He or she is being asked to pay for some projects which he or she is opposed to and doesn't want.

Just a little common sense ought to indicate to those who represent us in Congress that the best way to allocate funds from the NEA would be on a contract basis that clearly spells out what is acceptable in the use of our money. Violation of the terms of the contract would justify the cancellation of any further use of NEA funds by the vio-

The greatest crisis in our country today is not the national debt, but the moral decay that permeates our government and extends throughout our society. No success achieved in the field of art can compensate for anything done that adds to the degradation of moral values in our society.

Cinema culture

To the editor:

I am writing in response to the letters you recently published by a Mr. Smith and a Mr. Bybee, and in defense of the International Cinema. The reason for doing so is to prevent the program from being misrepresented and jeopardized by such individuals as the authors of these letters.

"Toto le Heroes," apart from being a terrific film, is a fine example of how we can gain insight and inspiration in the lives of others. The film does, as Smith and Bybee claim, contain nudity, violence, larceny, adultery and murder. However, the themes the picture presented were depicted in such a way to make them not only non-offensive, but also quite uplifting. For example, the nudity was that of a 10- to 12-year-old girl in the bathtub. Hardly offensive, especially when you realize they were only children. Truly people realize there is a difference between offensive and non-offensive nudity! This bathroom experience was a key one in the life of Toto, and one that explains his later actions.

Likewise, the violence, larceny, adultery and murder were necessary to the development of the theme — the frustration of a man living a life that is not his own — and were not depicted in any sort of offensive matter (note especially the juxtaposition of seriousness and humor in the larceny scene). As for the incest Smith and Bybee claim the film contained, and in case they came late to the movie, Toto was switched at birth so it was not his sister (in a literal sense) whom he was "getting intimate

I do agree with Smith and Bybee on one point. Violence, incest, nudity, etc. are subects loved the world over . look at the phenomenal success of the Bible. Like the Bible, Toto attempts to better our lives by presenting us with a life and carefully handling touchy subject matter. You see, it is not the subject matter but how it is treated that makes something offensive. I, for one, was not offended by anything in "Toto le Heroes." Instead, it reaffirmed my humanity and uplifted me. I am extremely grateful to the International Cinema for bring-ing these type of films to the cultural void of Provo (if you remember, "Money" magazine rated the cultural possibilities in the Prove-Orem area a one on a scale of 100).

Finally, I wish to thank Mr. Don Marshall for his care in picking life-altering, intelligent and important moving pictures. You are doing some of us a tremendous favor.

Don't let the word get out off campus, but the BYU basketball team has a secret weapon -- intimidation. In most basketball arenas, fans try desperately to intimidate opposing teams by yelling and scre by painting their faces, and even be ing their arms wildly during oppor free-throw attempts. Can you imagin thing sillier than that? BYU senior Amy Warmington swims a lap during practice Wednesday in preparation for Thursday's meet at 6 p.m. against Washington. Both the men's and women's teams will compete tonight at the Richards Building pool.

Y swimmers, divers host Washington

By TAUNYA TERRY Universe Sports Writer

Over the past weeks, BYU swimmers have been preparing for tonight's combined men and women's swimming and diving meet against the University of Washington.

The showdown between the Cougars and the Huskies will start at 6 p.m. at the Richards Building pool. Admission is free.

"The men's swim team has not competed since the Dec. 1 invitational but has been working hard to prepare for this meet," men's head coach Tim Powers said.

Among many exceptional BYU swimmers who will be competing are Olympian Kristian Johansson of Finland, and former WAC Swimmer of the Year, Tomislav Karlo of Croatia.

Women's head coach Stan Crump said he expects the team to win and swim faster than their last meet against USC. "The girls are not swimming at their peak yet, but we don't have to be perfect until the WAC championships,"

"Competition in the WAC is tough, but we have gotten better also," sprint freestyler Amy Edman said. Edman also said that even though the team is tired, the support they give each other has been instrumental in keeping the spirits

Cougar divers, meanwhile, are entering the heart of their training season. Head coach Keith Russell said he is confident the divers will do exceptionally well this meet.
The diving team has benefitted from a holiday training session and competing in the All-American Diving Invitational.

In the past, the men's diving program has really struggled, but Russell feels he has seen a dramatic improvement this year.

"I'd like to see a consistent list of dives with no mistakes," Russell said. "For the divers, this meet is another stepping stone to the WAC championships.

SLC council meets to decide fate of Derks Field tonight

By THOM MCDANIEL Universe Sports Writer

The fate of Salt Lake City's Derks Field will be decided Thursday night when the Salt Lake City council meets for their vote on the location of the new triple-A baseball stadium.

The construction of a new stadium represents a key element of the negotiations to bring a triple-A baseball team to Salt Lake City.

Roger Cutler, City Attorney for Salt Lake City, said that work on the stadium must begin by the end of this month to make the facility available for the incoming team by April 1, 1994.

Cutler said Derks Field is one of three locations that has been determined as a possible site for the new

He said the other locations are Derks Field North and block 42 in downtown Salt Lake City

"It's hard to say how the vote will turn out but it will be either Derks or Derks north," said Alan Hardman, city councilman for District No. 4.

Hardman said block 42 "is not really feasible because of land acquisition problems dealing with historical buildings.

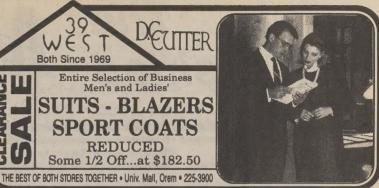

Ron Whitehead, city councilman for District No. 1, said the reason Derks is on the top of the list is because "it's there now and it's the cheapest."

Hardman said selection of a design team will take place next week after a site is determined.

Y faculty duo combines for concert playing piano, double bass tonight.

By RUSS ARNOLD Universe Staff Writer

The faculty duo of Walter Birkedahl and Dian Baker-Drinkall will perform in concert tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Madsen Recital Hall in the Harris Fine Arts Center.

The concert will include selections Corelli, Schubert and Rachmaninoff.

Solo music for the double bass is scarce, said Birkedahl of the Music department.

To overcome this scarcity, Birkedahl has transcribed most of the pieces he will play at the concert with pianist Baker-Drinkall.

"It (the double bass) has been used as a solo instrument for over 200 years," Birkedahl explained, but very few major composers have written solos for the bass."

Called the string bass, double bass, contrabass, or upright bass, this instrument by any other name is still the same.

It is the lowest member of the string family, and because of the limited amount of bass material many of the pieces Birkedahl will perform are sonatas originally written for violin.

Birkedahl will be given a chance to show the double bass' potential performance ability during the con-

Full gutters may cause spring floods

By ERNEST GEIGENMILLER

High mountain snowpack, combined with warming temperatures, could mean a "potential nuisance" for Provo and its residents, said Merril Bingham, director of public works for Provo.

Three potential problems include a possible flooding of the Provo River, canyon runoff and snow accumulation near city gutters.

"If snow accumulation were to become a problem, we would get the drains opened up. Two weeks ago, on Columbia Lane, we opened up the drain because minor floods caused people to have a difficult time parking there," Bingham said.

Provo has a storm drainage system and a sewage system drainage, Bingham said. Melted snow empties into the storm drainage system, and enters city canals, eventually pouring into Utah Lake.

"The sewage system is collective and flows into a water-treatment facility nearby," Bingham said.

Canyon runoff is another concern, as increasing amounts of snowpack are monitored along the mountain front. The Rock and Slate Canyons

Cougars' new starting lineup is nears the top in the nation.

Russell Larson took over for Jared Miller and Shane Knight two games ago, the Cougar offense has averaged 87.5 points per game. Reid feels Nixon has added a spark to the BYU offense.

"Nixon gives us a new dimension. As we start getting him in playing shape, he will add a lot to our team," Reid said. "On a given night he is as good as anybody offensive-holding opponents to 40.1 percent shooting, is only .05 percent away from the top fifteen nationally.

"We've been consistent defensively all season," Reid said.

Although SDSU has lost 21 consecutive WAC games, BYU is not taking them lightly. "They've got a good basketball team, they've played some good teams real close,"

New ski lift has Midway up in arms

The Associated Press

MIDWAY, — Residents of this small community on the east side of the Wasatch Range say Brighton Ski Resort's plan to place chair lifts down a nearby canyon would ruin the good life in their mountain town.

Brighton's owner, Boyne Resorts USA, wants to put two chair lifts down pristine Snake Creek Canyon.

The lifts, reaching to Wasatch Mountain State Park above Midway, would provide the first skier access from one side of the Wasatch Mountains to the Resorts on the west side of the range Alta, Snowbird, Brighton and Solitude — are separated from Park City resorts by terrain that's impassable in winter. Skiers must drive close to an hour to move between the resorts. "We'd lose our canyon and it would change this beautiful place forever," said Marilyn Larsen, a Midway City councilwoman who with her counterparts unanimously passed a resolution last year against the proposal.

and documentary films with a wide selection of premiere films, special events, tributes and seminars. In addition to the Park City screenings, films and events are also being offered at the Sundance Screening Room and at the Tower Theatre in Salt Lake City.

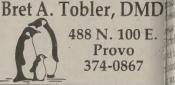

This year's opening night event is the world premiere of "Into the West," featuring a powerhouse lineup of directors and stars. The "West" of the title is western Ireland, where a father is forced to chase after his sons who are trying to recapture a prized horse.

Denzel Washington will receive the second annual Piper-Heidsieck Tribute to Independent Vision during the Festival in recognition of his standing out as an icon of independent vision and commitment to his work and artistic integrity in America in such films as "Malcolm X," "Glory" and "Mo' Better Blues."

Another characteristic of the festival is its openness to new film-

UNIVERSALS — BYU Athletic Director Glen Tuckett said Wednesday no school has requested his permission to speak to former Cougar forward Tony Woods. Tuckett will grant such permission to other universities "in a wink." Woods has now missed an NCAA deadline which would have made him eligible to begin playing basketball at Georgia or Georgia Tech, close to his Rome, Ga., home next January. He must now wait until the 1994-5 season BYU has won every game in which it has led at halftime, and won only one, against
